Once there were three rabbits.

Their names were:

Flopsy, Mopsy, and Big Bertha.

They lived in a backyard.

The yard was in Lethbridge, Alberta.

It was a safe and happy home.

A kind woman lived there.

Her name was Juniper Snow.

Everyone called her Junie.

She had five busy children.

The rabbits loved their home.

They ate grass.

They hopped and played.

They rested in the sun.

Flopsy was the oldest.

She loved to eat.

She ate grass and hay.

She also liked treats.

Flopsy ate carrots and flowers.

She even ate plants from the garden.

“Oh no, Flopsy!”

She did not always follow the rules.

Mopsy was small and fast.
She loved to run and explore.
She liked to play with children.
But Mopsy always wanted more fun.

Big Bertha was big and soft.

She loved her home.

She had food and a safe place to rest.

She felt happy just staying there.

The rabbits were different.

Flopsy wanted more food.

Mopsy wanted adventure.

Big Bertha wanted to stay home.

One night, the yard was quiet.
The children were asleep.
But Mopsy was awake.

Mopsy wanted to explore.

She found a soft spot in the dirt.

She began to dig.

Dig, dig, dig!

She dug faster and faster.

Soon, she made a tunnel.

Mopsy went under the fence.

She came out on the other side.

She looked around.

The world felt big.

Behind her was home.

In front of her was something new.

Mopsy took one step forward.

A new adventure had begun.
